Barchart Launches Extensive ETF Fundamental Data Service

CHICAGO, IL – March 4, 2010 – Barchart.com, Inc., a leading provider of market data and information, today announced the launch of a new Exchange Traded Funds (ETF) fundamental data service. The fundamental ETF dataset, including Exchange Traded Notes (ETN), is an extensive database of reference, financial and price related information covering all U.S. listed ETFs and ETNs. The dataset is available from Barchart as a data feed service, as well as hosted website content.

“ETFs are a unique financial instrument, not to be treated like stocks, not to be treated like mutual funds. Barchart analysts have spent considerable time analyzing the dynamics of the ETF marketplace, to compile a dataset that is relevant and important to market professionals in the wealth management, index, and advisory fields,” said Eero Pikat, President of Barchart. “Our dataset offers a singular source for the key data points needed to make critical analytical decisions for ETFs and ETNs,” added Pikat.

Barchart’s fundamental ETF data includes over 900 ETFs and dozens of data fields, including sectors, top holdings, assets under management, fund family information, and key financial ratios and returns. In addition to the most comprehensive ETF fundamental database available, Barchart also provides real-time, delayed, end-of-day and historical ETF price data.
